TATE WINS MATCH IN 6TH ROUND

Dallas Fighter is Game but too Beefy to Last Long Before Husky Chickasha Pugilist; Jab in Jaw Finishing Touch

One of the best crowds which Chickasha has ever turned out at a boxing match, assembled at the Athletic club last night to see the go between Bob Williams, the big boy from Dallas, and Texas Tate, of Chickasha.

The management delivered the goods in the promised "fast and furious" prelims, and the crowd howled itself hoarse as the youthful aspirants for title honors pummeled each other about the ring before the big event.

At 9:30 all prelims were called off and the spectators came to attention while Dotson frosted the ring with rain and introduced Ben Savage, of Alex. referee.

Tate and Williams came into their corners at the same time, the admirers of each athlete greeting him with cheers as he climbed through the ropes. Tate showed up in the pink of condition, while it required but a glance to see that the Dallas boy was beefy and undertrained. The weights of the contestants was announced as 204 Tate, and 220 Williams.

Following their introduction and the preliminary handshake the principals retired to their corners to rush together when the gong tapped on round one.

Round one was tame, each gladiator sparing to feel out the reach and skill of his opponent. Towards the close of the round, however, some very pretty infighting was in evidence with Williams rushing to the clinch as Tate began to survey his map with his haymaker. Round closed with honors even.

Round two saw a repetition of Williams clinches. Repeatedly the big boy from Dallas rushed to the clinch and depended on his beef to force Tate across the ring and into the ropes. This round closed with the spectators howling for the referee to "pull 'em apart and make 'em fight." Round closed with honors even.

Round three opened with some very pretty infighting, followed with some neat footwork on the part of Tate as he danced away from the rushes of the Dallas man. Clinch followed clinch with heavy body blows exchanged. Tate's footwork failed to keep Williams from clinching and hugging towards the close. The gong sounded on the clinch with both contestants fighting hard following the breakaway. Seconds had to help the referee pull them apart and send each one to his corner. Tate's round.

Round four was the beginning of the end. Williams rushed and clinched but the referee would separate them and Tate would dance about and land on the kitchen of the fat man, working on his wind until the stars twinkled. Williams' beef, however, enabled him to still rush Tate to the ropes but his wind was too short to admit of following up any advantage gained. Tate's round.

Round five found Tate with his second wind and Williams sparring for time, but still inclined to rush to the clinch in an effort to avoid punishment. Both boxers displayed considerable skill in the beginning of this round. Round closed with some neat infighting, each man searching for the other's kidneys in the clinch and working over the other's map in the open sparring. Round closed with Williams' EROK.

Round six opened with the clash of the gladiators in the center of the ring. Williams rushed and attempted to clinch. Tate broke from clinches and landed, with every break. Both boxers went to the ropes repeatedly in the first half of this round. Williams forced Tate to the north ropes only to be rushed by Tate across the ring and into the northwest corner. Back across the ring to the west and back again to the north and then to the south side, where Tate landed on the butt of the fat man's jaw and put him over the mat for the count of seven. Williams struggled to his feet only to go down again from a heavy right on the neck which skidded him in a heap across the ring.

Williams was a game boxer and a good loser. He was beefy and outclassed, but did his best to protect himself in the clinches and thereby enable himself to stay out the full ten rounds, but without avail. Tate had kept his word and turned the singing birds loose to warble songs of defeat to his opponent.

LEONARD IS STRIKE-OUT KING

Clever Southpaw of Boston Americans is Champion at Whiffing Batsmen for 1915 Season.

"Dutch" Leonard is the leader of all strike-out artists in the major leagues. Basing his work on the average number of strike-outs per regulation game, or games in which he pitches five innings or more, the clever southpaw of the Boston Americans was champion at whiffing batsmen for the season of 1915.

Of course G. Alexander, Walter Johnson and also Dave Davenport of the St. Louis Peds fanned the greatest number by reason of the fact that they worked in about twice as many games as the average hurler, but the best average work was pulled off by Leonard.

The hero of the world's series also holds the best record for whiffing batsmen in a single contest, his feat of getting 14 of the St. Louis Browns in a nine-inning game being the best performance in the major leagues for the season of 1915.

Grass Manicurist a National.

Manager Griffith of Washington has signed a prospect named Leonard Schwab from Cincinnati, where he has been a leveler of the diamond and a mowder of sod at the Red's ball park. Schwab is an infielder and has played some good baseball around Cincinnati when not busy manicuring Herrmann's ball yard.

New Stands at St. Paul.

Contracts have been let for rebuilding the stands at the St. Paul ball park which burned last fall. The stands will be of steel and concrete and will cost about $70,000. The park will have a seating capacity of about 12,000 or equal to that of the old stands.

White Elephants Scattered.

All of the famous White Elephants of a few seasons ago are again picked up in the American league and scattered broadly—Barry in Boston, Baker in New York, Melania still in Philadelphia, and Collins in Chicago.

Variation in Reckoning.

In Great Britain a billion is reckoned as a million millions. In the United States it is only a thousand millions.

GIANTS IN OLDEN DAYS

Roger Connor Was One of Greatest Batsmen in His Day.

"Orator" O'Rourke Also Played on New York Team—Each Managed Team in Little Connecticut Valley Circuit.

At the age of fifty-two, Roger Connor, the famous oldtime first baseman of the New York Giants, made three base hits in four times at bat in a game between Springfield and Meriden of the Connecticut Valley league and one of them was a three-bagger. The famous swatsman of National league fame was one of the greatest batsmen in his day and generation. For 12 seasons he batted well over the .300 mark and his smashes were of the sensational order.

James (Orator) O'Rourke was the big noise in the same league, holding the office of secretary of the league, also manager and catcher for the Bridgeport club, and Jeems had been playing ball for 32 seasons previous to this. "Orator" O'Rourke was a professional ball player when Roger Connor was a raw, raw recruit. These two grand players were on the New York Giants for many years and twice through men of their ilk that the name Giants was affixed to the Gotham organization, for they were giants in more ways than one.

After many years these vets met again on the diamond green and both well over the half century mark. In the season of 1903 each managed a team in the little league known as the Connecticut Valley circuit. Roger was still playing his old position at first base and the "Orator" was still catching the curves of hurlers who hadn't seen the light of day when he was grabbing the benders of "Mickey" Welch and Tim Keefe. But, on the other hand, Messrs. O'Rourke and Connor didn't have much trouble in solving the curves of the modern-day hurler. Every time their teams met, the two old boys would have a batting tilt. In one game O'Rourke made five hits, while Roger made but two, but, as a rule, Connor had the shade on the lawyer and beat him out in the season's average.

That same season James O'Rourke had his son playing third base for him, a circumstance hardly ever chronicled in baseball history. The competition between these two batting honors was fierce, but O'Rourke, Sr., had it all over the child. James O'Rourke played ball many seasons after that year.

OLD SOLDIERS ARE ALL GONE

Time was, not so very long ago, that the Minneapolis Millers were familiar as the "Old Soldiers" of the American association, the inference, of course, being that the team, for the most part, was made up of veteran players. Now Dave Altizer is the only member of the Cantillon clan that cannot deny the soldier title. Aside from Daredevil Dave, who has just renewed his contract with the Millers as utility man for the coming season, the team, almost without exception, will be made up of young players.

Altizer, however, is not only a veteran of the diamond, but of the Spanish-American war as well, so it may readily be seen that he is the only "old soldier" to remain. He is one of the smartest players in baseball and is still able to render valuable assistance to his team.

Bats Well on Cleveland List.

If Chick Gandil, donning a Cleveland uniform, could hit as well in the Cleveland ball park half the season as he has done in his visits there with Washington, he might put the Indians in the running. Figures show that Gandil's batting average in Cleveland has been .335, while last year, in spite of his slump, he batted .362 on the Cleveland lot.
